“Man in suit arrested with kilograms of fentanyl – other man in suit with him visibly concerned – both men remain silent and both have no criminal records to this day because - How did the officer know to trust his intuition and search the suspicious driver's vehicle? Probable cause? Yeah they were clearly hiding something and acting like they got caught soon as they got pulled over. Does it matter? Ask John F Kennedy, Ask war veterans.”
“FUCK! Never-mind don't ask, run! RUN!”

There was a magic shop in the arcade. And a man with a gray beard. He knew how to do all of the illusions.

I would point to a white and red cylinder on the wall behind him. "No, that trick is eighty dollars."

My mother would scoff with the man already nodding in correspondence of her disagreement. I light up when things are too high for me to reach. I buzz with florescence and hidden knowledge. I loose all self doubt and jump ahead when I can learn something, experience something that makes mothers scoff and bearded magicians rub their eyes.

"Not even I know how to do that one. There's a magician named Bruce Spengler who could take a railroad spike and pop." He punched into his left forearm with his closed right fist. "Push it straight in through one side and out the other!" My mother made more noises of disapproval, maybe she spoke an entire paragraph, all that had gone fuzzy as the man's gray black-static beard. I am Harry Anderson and I am Bruce Spengler, I did know it in my full being, as my gaze drifted into vignette the hatted man on the cylinder. I will be like this some day, sooner than I know.

Fuck

run?

-yeah!

"YOU BE SAFE! TODAY, IS A DANGEROUS DAY!"

Because the Raven, like a writing desk, is a full canvas on stilts. She is a painter, and deserves to be paid better but volunteers to hang around smoke on the thirteenth floor for what if inside there are more like her?

There are not, Magpie proves this when he takes off with the woman's ring and, - still holding her necklace - cuts me across the mouth. I stumble backwards, concussing myself in a pile of oil barrels. Hot blood and cold rainwater mix and loose for two days. Now I gotta kill me a bitch. I hate killing bitches, it's more quiet to shoot em broad day compared to the screaming one puts up with if you think it's as simple as blunt force trauma.
